ABSTRACT

[0049] A dynamic network interface is described, intended to enable the efficient processing of received data within a computer network by a target computer system by reducing excessive copying of the received data prior to being accessed by a network software application.